

C A R R I E E T T E R

The Wake

The hills rise blackly, charred tree by tree.

Where no squirrel forages or bird nests, where

no leaf absorbs
the noon light,

the silence refuses
peace to the traveller,

who feels at once
guilty to pass and

guilty to pause.